Excerpt: . preface. I deliver to the American public a philosophical system, comprised under the name of Monism and Meliorism two words which have been used by different philosophers, and which, for some time, have indicated, as it were, the direction of the development of philosophic thought. Monism is the ideal which no one hitherto has been able to realize satisfactorily, though many have tried to do so. It has become, therefore, the watch-word of diverse parties, who lacked the solid basis, on which to erect the building of such a conception of the world, as might be well founded in its cornerstone and harmonious in its structure. The cornerstone to be chosen is causality and the only criterion by which any philosophical theory can be tested and verified, is given in its doctrine of ethics. But on both subjects the greatest confusion prevails, both...
