Not illustrated. 1909 Excerpt: .it will be advantageous to me to plant next year a little red clover on my ground--not to plant this year and next year plough it up, but let that stay upon the ground. I think the advantage of our clover--it used to be in Ohio, and that was where we did the clover business--we thought it was not the advantage of our clover there so much that we would plant it to-day and plough it up to-morrow, but that the center would come out of those roots and make it porous and let the air and sunshine down into our ground. I want to know if that will be advantageous to my orchard. Mr. Newton--This matter of a cover crop was first suggested about two years ago to my knowledge by the Agricultural School over there at Grand Junction, and there are very few who have tried it in the Grand Valley. I don t know of a single crop of clover yet started. I am just beginning to learn orcharding. I want to learn more; that is why I am here. Mr. (lough--I would say for Mr. Newton s information and the other people in the Grand Valley, Mr. Homgardner, of Grand Junction, had clover in his orchard fifteen years ago. The first clover I ever saw in this country was over at Whitewater and that was the Shropshire orchard. The owner said: Why, I grow that clover here is so that when...
